Day 147: Bright Ideas

So, we aren't buying stuff, and that includes household goods.

Like light bulbs for instance.

Did we stock up? No.

Are we going to give in and buy some? No.

Is it silly to not buy these modern essentials and then make up for it later by buying a bunch of them to replace the ones that died during the year? Probably.

First off, I thought it wouldn't be a problem because these new energy efficient light bulbs are supposed to last 7 years or so. Figuring we've only lived here for

"For one year we will not buy any material goods. We will buy only consumables, and everything we buy must come in recyclable or compostable packaging."

Thank you!
